The movie begins showing the protagonist as a low IQed, autistic and outcast young boy from Alberta, Canada being ignored by other children his own age at a family's Christmas gathering. Then we see him as a teenager being mocked by his high-school classmates. We see him next as a young adult having trouble finding a job and getting rejected by all sorts of job interviewers. Finally, we see a scene where the protagonist is already a thirty year old adult still living with his mom and going through really tough financial times. At this point, he decides to seek out help within the American scientific community. But in order for him to be successful at contacting and persuading world-renowned scientists to help him out, he has to offer them the opportunity to run all kinds of new tests and experiments on his body. Once the American scientific community agrees to his proposal, he decides to take the risk and jumps on board this new adventure in search for the betterment of his own life.

After the scientists are done completing all kinds of studies, tests and experiments on the protagonist's body, the protagonist becomes extremely intelligent with the exception that he loses all of the memories from his past. He's later put back into the real world by the group of American scientists that took care of him. He quickly learns everything there is to know about the stock market and becomes financially successful at a rapid pace.

On a side note, the protagonist had also been considered a mama's boy since he was a kid. He and his mom had always had an extraordinarily special relationship. In fact, when the scientists first came to the protagonist's home on a chopper to pick him up, his mom got very emotional when saying good bye to him.

After five years without knowing anything about her son, the mother goes on a mission to find him and reconnect with him. As soon as she learns that her once autistic son had become one of the wealthiest men in America, she frantically tries to reach out to him. When she's finally able to catch a glimpse of him on the streets of Manhattan, NY, she tries to approach him. But he doesn't recognize her at all as he had lost all of his past memories. Desperate to talk to her son, she suddenly cuts him off and stands in front of him. The protagonist decides not to waste time dealing with this type of socially awkward and uncomfortable situation. And he pulls a little trick with one of his feet that ends up making his mom stumble and get out of his way. At that precise moment, a car runs by and ends up hitting her, which results in her instant death. But he keeps walking and acts as if he's not involved in the crime scene. So he runs free and without any sense of guilt, not knowing what he had just done.

After a series of events, the protagonist recovers all of his past memories and realizes the atrocious act he committed to the most precious person in the world to him. He becomes mad beyond reason. And he goes on a vengeance mission and killing spree. He first makes sure to become an adequately trained and equipped assassin. And then he proceeds to kill all the members of the group of scientists that compromised his ability to remember his past.

At the end, we see a camera shot of the protagonist talking to himself at his New York City penthouse. He's talking about the consequences of ambition and the fact that pursuing what you want in life with all your heart doesn't necessarily make you happy at the end of the day. After all, it is true that the road to hell is paved with good intention. In this camera shot, we only see part of his body. But as soon as he stops talking, we see a wider camera shot. At this point, we can see him sitting on his chair and holding a gun to his head, which he then uses to kill himself.
